

I don't think banks should be able to contact those on the no-call lists -- whether or not the person is a current or former customer -- to solicit business. (If it's regarding a current transaction, that's OK.) If a bank, even one I'm currently with, contacts me to solicit business, I can guarantee them that they will NOT get my business. If I have a banking need, I will initiate the contact.